Understanding the Unsure

- May be coping with process of change and adaption

- Can feel a sense of loss – that their culture or resources are being taken away

- May not have frequent contact with refugees and immigrants

Issues to Consider When Speaking to the “Unsure”

- Start with messages they relate to and that speak to their beliefs and shared, local values
- Communicate through spokespeople with greatest credibility
- Focus on how RC members benefit, vs. how they are obligated
- Avoid restating myths
- Consider this as a way to begin an ongoing conversation

A Welcoming Sign to Immigrants in the South

They say there is nothing like Southern hospitality in making folks feel welcomed and included. But lately, for immigrants of all stripes, this hasn’t been the general feeling from states like Alabama, Georgia, and South Carolina. The sentiment towards immigrants and Latinos in general has been anything but Southern Comfort; despite the millions of dollars these groups contribute to the economies of these states. Why We Care

I am loved by my Latino neighbors. So I love in return.

When my dad was sick, his neighbor from across the street helped him. He was a kind person.

My friend, a DREAMer from Mexico, is a 19-year-old student. I want him to know that he has a future.

A doctor from India saved my life.

What values do my audience and I share?

What will you say to your audience to convince them to take the action you would like?
Without the energy and intellect and innovation of our immigrant community, Montgomery County would, quite simply, be incomplete. “New Americans” are a critical piece in building a better future for all County residents.

Examples of Unifying Messaging

“"In the military, there is a saying that you never leave anyone behind on the battlefield. Indeed, in today’s military, those who are white, black and brown fight alongside each other and know that they need to have each other’s back. They know they can count on each other in good and tough times. We need to bring this spirit into civilian life. We all need each other in this country as we move forward into the future. We’ve all got to have each other’s backs.”
